Relatively Undifferentiated State of the Sexual Impulse in Early Life--Homosexuality in Schools--Latent Inversion--Rarity of Acquired Homosexuality--Classification of the Varieties of Sexual Inversion-- Simple Inversion--Cases I to XXX--Psychosexual Hermaphroditism-- Cases XXXI to XXXVIII. When the sexual instinct first appears in early youth, it seems to be much less specialized than normally it becomes later. Not only is it, at the outset, less definitely directed to a specific sexual end, but even the sex of its object is sometimes uncertain.¹ This has always been so well recognized that those in authority over young men have sometimes forced women upon them to avoid the risk of possible unnatural offenses.² The institution which presents these phenomena to us in the most marked and the most important manner is, naturally, the school, in England especially the public school. In France, where the...
