Extrait: .which his tenderness of nature had dictated. He entered his cave, but this too was silent and solitary: no guest appeared; no affict ed Lord waited his arrival. f However cautiously Les Roches had directed his course, however secret and retired he had chosen his residence, still had his motions been long watched by some base and ignoble men, allured by the rewards promised to those who mould discover and seize him. Four sordid hinds, disguised in the garb of wood-men, had diligently traced him thro all his various progress, but still were terrified and kept at wary distance by the vigilance and well known valour of his attendants. The moment of his separation had not escaped them: they exulted, and resolved to seize this critical occasion. They pursued his steps, and hastened down to the valley by different routs to them well known. They lay unnoticed, impatient to snatch their prey: they marked the late conference, and saw the hermit depart; and no sooner was he lost in the distant wood, than rushing furiously into the cave, and drawing their concealed weapons, they H 4 seised. seized the unhappy Lord unprepared for resistance. In vain did he enquire the cause, and endeavour to expostu late : they sternly commanded him to attend their pleasure, and, hurrying him precipitately away, directed their course towards the castle of Poictiers, filled with the delightful idea of those rewards they were to receive...
